Awful Outrage of a Delicate Young Girl.

BRUTE HER SISTER'S LOVER

The Terrible Experience of Poor Little Katie Sommer While Returning Home From a Dance.

DETROIT, Dec. 27.—The citizens of Detroit have been living in a state of subdued excitement and indignation during the past week over the most brutal and cowardly criminal assault that ever occurred within their quiet precincts. A week ago last Sunday morning Katie Sommer, the 16-year-old daughter of Victor Sommer, was assaulted by Charles Martin, in a ditch running along the Wabash railroad track, within 200 feet of her own home. While the girl has now recovered from the shock, it was feared for several days that the excitement would break down her nervous strength and kill her.

It was 3:30 o'clock on Sunday morning when Robert H. Fox, engineer of switch engine No. 2, together with his fireman, John Schlegelhauff, slowed up on the Wabash tracks at the Pearl road and started to exit their lunch. The night was pitch dark. Fox saw in the glare of the headlights a little girl jump out of the ditch and run across the track to his engine.

"Oh, mister, please help me. There he goes," was all she could say, as she sank to the ground. Just then a man darted past.

Pursuit was given, but the man escaped in the darkness. The men returned to the engine and succeeded in reviving the unhappy girl.

Her face was scratched and bleeding, her thick black hair fell over it, and her clothes were badly torn and covered with mud. Her hat was gone and it was half an hour before she recovered sufficiently to tell her name and where she lived.

On being taken home she was put to bed and everything in human power was done to relieve her suffering. Her clothes were torn to shreds. Her face was a mass of cuts and bruises, and her limbs were swollen and bleeding, where the brute had kicked her. There were bloody finger marks on her throat.

This was done when he tried to strangle her with his hands. The girl's father, Martin, had been attentive to the girl's father and meeting his victim at a dance engaged several dances. He started home with her and on the way asked for a kiss, which was indignantly refused. A second later he had Miss Sommer by the throat and the struggle began.

The neighborhood is up at arms and will lynch Martin if he is found. His poor little victim is slowly recovering.

INDIA, Dec. 27.—The refusal of the supreme court to grant a rehearing in the case of Frank R. Chase vs. F. P. Broughton and Franklin Lee meets with much approval here. Major Chase, after a year's lumbering on the land purchased by him in Lake county, found a large tract of timber and instituted proceedings against Broughton and Lee in the big Rapids circuit before Judge Jenkins. He was rewarded with a verdict in his favor and was granted the land in question, with damages, the decree amounting to $80,000.

From the decision an appeal was made. F. P. B. Davis of Iowa and L. F. McFarley of Grand Rapids were Chase's attorneys and Norris & Norris of Grand Rapids and ex-Supreme Justice Graves of Battle Creek defended.
